Bellwether Status

- Ohio has had a reputation as the nation’s ultimate bellwether state in presidential elections; 2016 put that status into question
- One of the conditions of being a bellwether state is that its vote total is very close to the national average, which up until Election Night 2016, Ohio had repeatedly been for many decades
- Clinton won the popular vote by nearly three million votes; in Ohio, Trump won the popular vote by about 455,000 votes
- This outcome has caused pundits, analysts and political scientists to acknowledge that things changed because of Trump and Ohio may be trending Republican – away from being the nation’s top bellwether

Ohio: 2018 Gubernatorial Race

Results

DeWine 50.4% (2,231,917)

Cordray 46.7% (2,067,847)

- DeWine's vote total is third most ever for an Ohio gubernatorial candidate
- DeWine won 79 of Ohio's 88 counties, the closest being an 83-vote win in Erie County

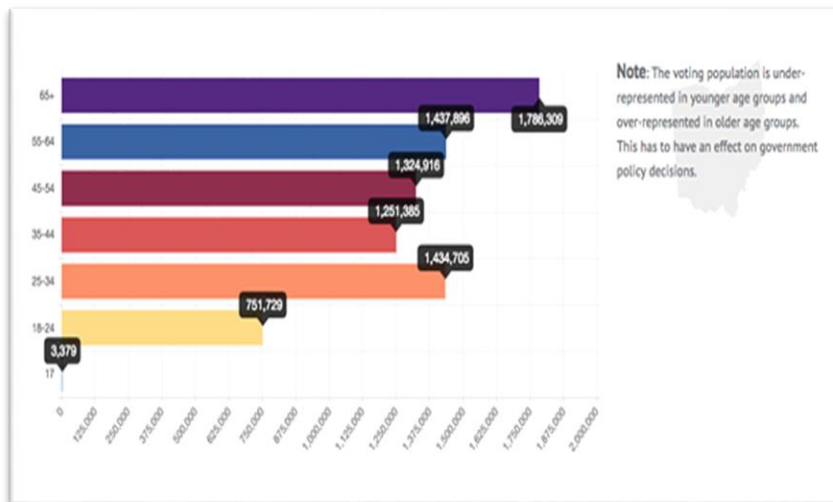

2018 Results: Implications for 2020

- While cities are turning bluer, the rural areas of Ohio are turning deep red
- Suburban voters have become the swing voters and increasingly are voting Democrat
- DeWine's 2018 victory illustrated a similar pattern to President Trump's 2016 electoral success in Ohio
 - Large Republican victories in rural Ohio and Republican gains in typically Democratic areas along Ohio River and in manufacturing sectors.
 - Democrat Richard Cordray's strongest support came from the state's largest cities: Cincinnati, Cleveland and Columbus, but also made gains in suburbia.
- Republicans will control Ohio's congressional and statehouse maps after the 2020 census
- GOP will set the agenda in the legislature

Ohio Voter Registration Is Over-represented By Older Age Groups

- An estimated 7,990,319 people are registered to vote in Ohio, but only 751,729 of those are between the ages of 18-24 compared to the 3,224,205 voters that are 55+
- According to state statistics, Ohio is 81.6 percent white and nationally it's 67 percent
- Only 27.5 percent of citizens have completed some form of higher education

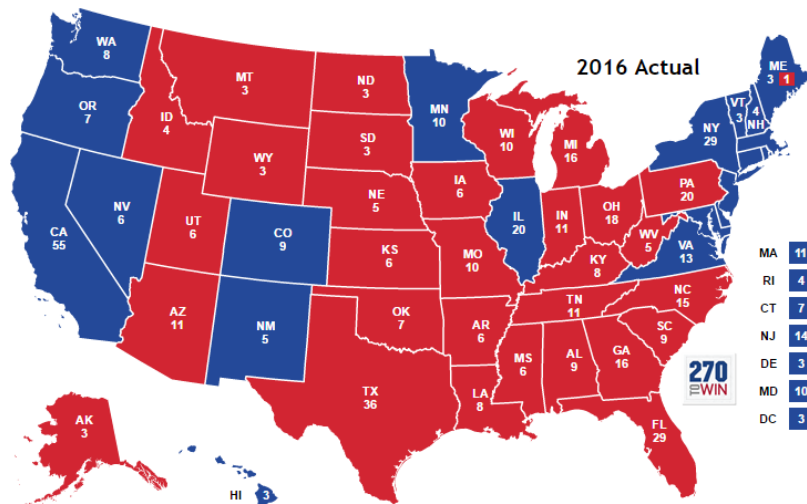

*Ohio Voter Project

Ohioans 60 And Older On Pace To Outnumber Those Under 20

- Ohio is on pace to become one of a handful of states mostly in the Midwest and Northeast that will have more residents age 60 and older than people under age 20
- According to projections, 18 states including Ohio, are on target for the older group to outnumber younger ones by the official count in 2020 – this was not the case for any state or Ohio county in 2000. Seniors will outnumber others in 64 of Ohio's 88 counties.
- If estimates hold true, Ohio in 2020 would have 2.91 million residents age 60 and older vs. 2.88 million under the age of 20
