● Secured enforcement of ICSID award for the Slovak Republic

We successfully represented the Slovak Republic in obtaining a US federal court order enforcing an International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID) arbitration award against Discovery Global LLC, a Texas-based oil and gas company. The award arose from an investor-state arbitration in which Discovery Global sought up to US$2.1 billion in damages under a bilateral investment treaty, alleging that the Slovak Republic had interfered with its oil and gas exploration activities. An ICSID tribunal rejected all claims, finding that the Slovak Republic had acted lawfully and reasonably, and ordered Discovery Global to reimburse the Slovak Republic for arbitration costs, legal fees and interest.

After Discovery Global failed to satisfy the award or respond to enforcement proceedings, the US District Court for the Northern District of Texas entered default judgment recognizing and enforcing the award. The court emphasized the limited scope of judicial review for ICSID awards and held that the award must be enforced as binding under US law.

The team representing the Slovak Republic included Stephen P. Anway, Jonathan R. Mureen, Raúl B. Mañón and Douglas Pilawa.

● Singapore court dismisses all of Tata Power's challenges to US$490 million arbitration awards in favor of Kleros

The investment company Kleros Capital Partners Limited and our firm today confirmed that the Singapore International Commercial Court \(SICC\) has dismissed every application brought by The Tata Power Company Limited \(Tata Power\) to overturn the arbitration awards issued in Kleros' favor. The ruling confirms and upholds the immediate final and binding nature of the awards. As a result, Tata Power is required immediately to pay Kleros a sum now exceeding US$640 million, comprising principal damages of US$490.32 million plus interest accruing at 5.33% per annum since November 2020, currently around US$71,600 every day, together with Kleros' legal costs.

● Victory for Republic of Colombia

We are pleased to report a victory for the Republic of Colombia in the US District Court for the District of Columbia. Our team included José Feris, Raúl Manon, Ellen Phillips and Douglas Pilawa.

The case arose from a US$311 million International Centre for Dispute Resolution (ICDR) arbitration award obtained by Perimetral Oriental de Bogotá (POB) against Colombia's National Infrastructure Agency (ANI) in connection with a highway project near Bogotá. Although Colombia was not a party to the underlying contract or arbitration, POB sought to enforce the award against both ANI and Colombia in US court.

Representing Colombia in the enforcement action, our team successfully argued that Colombia was entitled to sovereign immunity under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act and could not be held liable for ANI's obligations absent a showing that ANI was Colombia's alter ego. The court agreed, stating that "Colombia is correct," and dismissed the claims against Colombia for lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

- IDR team secures hard-fought arbitration victory for Mercedes-Benz, saving the client US$95 million

A team led by Raúl Mañón, José Feris and Paulina Rodríguez has secured a significant victory for Mercedes-Benz in a long-running feud with its former distributor for Guatemala, with an International Centre for Dispute Resolution (ICDR) tribunal unanimously dismissing the claimants' US$95 million claim and also awarding our client all of its costs and most of its fees.

Events

- Webinar: Should AI replace humans in international arbitration?
September 22

Join associates Denis Sarvarov and Ana Luiza Castro for a live debate exploring whether AI should replace human counsel, arbitrators, experts and tribunal secretaries. In a series of short Oxford-style debates, each mentee will argue in real time against an AI model on whether AI should replace each role. The debate will take place on September 22, from 3 to 4:30 p.m.

Singapore Office LNG luncheon event

Our Singapore office recently hosted its first liquefied natural gas (LNG) luncheon event – “Navigating the Middle East crisis: Legal and commercial impacts on Asia’s energy markets,” in collaboration with the International Criminal Court’s (ICC) Young Arbitration and ADR Forum (YAAF).

The event included a panel discussion with outstanding speakers with decades of hands-on experience across the global energy sector, including:

- Rod Duke, a former energy industry CEO and now partner at TWCOG
- Jane Liao, the former CEO of the natural gas business at CPC Corporation
- Max Rockall, our head of Asia Pacific Energy Disputes and LNG practice.

The panel engaged in a lively discussion regarding the impact of the Middle East crisis on oil and LNG flows into Asia; the commercial responses adopted by market participants; key contractual and legal risks; and what energy companies and lawyers should be doing now to prepare for what lies ahead.

"Open waters, open questions: Allocation and priority after the Hormuz crisis"

Max Rockall, Sagar Gupta and Henry Spence write, "Much of the market's attention has understandably been fixed on the closure of the Strait of Hormuz and the immediate consequences for force majeure and non-delivery. The next phase, however, may prove no less contentious. When operations resume, the question will not simply be whether LNG can move again, but which cargoes move first, for whom, and on what contractual basis. In that sense, the reopening of the Strait may mark not the end of the present disruption, but the beginning of a different and potentially more complicated contractual and operational problem."

● 2026 Update

"LNG and Gas Developments in Europe in the Wake of Conflict: Is 2026 the New 2022?"

The role of liquified natural gas (LNG) in Europe has evolved significantly in the last five years, with every indication that the ship-transported fuel – and the disputes that go with it – will continue to be a mainstay in the European energy mix.

This article, written by Michelle Glassman Bock, Letizia Ceccarelli and Christina Luo, reflects on the changed role of LNG in Europe over the last several years and addresses certain of its ongoing challenges, including those arising in light of the 2022 Russian cuts to pipeline gas and the latest developments in the Middle East. For those European buyers entering the LNG market or expanding their portfolio within it, a close consideration of contractual terms and the context in which they may be exercised will be an issue of top priority.

"International Arbitration Experts Discuss The Major Challenges For Arbitration In 2026"

Naomi Briercliffe and Karolina Latasz discuss the major challenges for arbitration in 2026: "Among many challenges facing international arbitration in 2026, two stand out in particular: sanctions and artificial intelligence. Sanctions loom large in arbitration, shaping who can arbitrate, what can be decided, and whether awards mean anything. We expect more investor-state claims brought by sanctioned individuals and entities over measures affecting their assets (such as Fridman v Luxembourg or Belaruskali v Lithuania). If the sanctioned investors succeed, drawn-out enforcement proceedings are likely to ensue. For example, Council Regulation 2025/1494 prohibits courts of EU member states from enforcing ISDS awards relating to measures imposed under the EU's Russia sanctions. Sanctions are also taking centre stage in commercial arbitrations. As we have seen in the wave of cases brought against Gazprom over gas under-deliveries, these disputes tend to revolve around impossibility, illegality, frustration or force majeure."

"Commentary: Battle Of The Arbitration Seats: Contrasting The 2025 English Arbitration Act Reform With France's Reform Proposal"

The "battle of seats" in international arbitration is not new, spanning over half a century. Various global capitals have developed favorable legal ecosystems – either through enacting legislation ensuring legal certainty or issuing court decisions viewed as favorable towards arbitration. The "rivalry" between London and Paris as arbitration seats is particularly noteworthy and has been put in display in cases where their courts have taken opposing approaches on the same issues. José Feris and Natalia Rodríguez Álvarez explore the recent reform of the English Arbitration Act and France's proposed reform of arbitration, focusing on the reasons, principles and solutions adopted in each system, viewed through the lens of their respective legal philosophies.

“Strait of Hormuz: Energy disputes inevitable amidst war in Iran”

Another situation that Asia Pacific energy disputes and liquified natural gas (LNG) head Max Rockall highlights is the opportunities for LNG arbitrage, where he expects sellers to attempt to “capitalise on the potential lack of supply in the market.” He points out that for sellers with sophisticated and flexible operations, they might seek to take advantage of lucrative opportunities to “cancel or divert cargoes away from the lower priced contracts and markets towards the new higher priced Asian premium that we are seeing.” He comments that for many energy companies, the temptation of windfall profits in the current situation might be too appealing to turn down, leading to an acceptance of a disputes risk. In the same vein, Max says claims may also arise over disputed force majeure restoration quantities. As the situation evolves, Max expects rescheduling, annual programming and potential contested flexibility disputes to become “the key battleground areas” in relation to the Strait of Hormuz. Parties will be negotiating the details of any force majeure, the rescheduling of deliveries to later dates, as well as navigating contested flexibility rights in contracts. “That includes ship changes and loading port nominations and changes (potentially impacting the force majeure analysis),” says Max.

“Dutch real estate giant fails in EUR 425 million arbitral claim against Romania”

Plaza Centers’ major dispute with Romania over a stalled development project, which has involved dual arbitrations, has seen the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID) dismiss the company’s claim on jurisdictional grounds. A long-running, high-stakes wrangle over the stalled “Casa Radio” project in Bucharest – which spurred Romania to launch its own arbitration claim against Plaza Centers for €2 billion – has resulted in Plaza’s original arbitration claim failing at ICSID, which rejected the company’s claim on jurisdictional grounds based on Plaza’s conduct and agreements. Romania was represented by a team from our firm in New York and Prague, an MPR Partners team in Bucharest, and the Romanian Ministry of Finance.

"Mercedes-Benz sees off claim by Guatemalan distributor"

A Guatemalan banker's bid to overturn an award favoring Mercedes-Benz in a dispute over a distribution deal has shed light on an International Centre for Dispute Resolution (ICDR)-administered arbitration that saw five challenges to the arbitrators. Francisco Alvarado Macdonald and his company Comercial Omni (Omnisa) applied last month to the US District Court for the Southern District of New York to set aside a final award that dismissed their case against the luxury carmaker on jurisdictional grounds. The dispute is understood to have been worth around US$93 million. The firm is acting for Mercedes-Benz in the US court and also advised in the arbitration alongside Guatemalan boutique ALTA QIL+4 Abogados. *Francisco José Alvarado Macdonald and Comercial Omni De Guatemala v. "Panel sides with Kazakhstan in oilfield dispute"

Similar arguments are in play in a separate arbitration worth US$200 billion that Kazakhstan is pursuing against the operators of Kashagan, one of the world's largest offshore oil fields. The respondent in that claim is the North Caspian Operating Company (NCOC), in which Eni, Shell, Exxon and TotalEnergies hold equal stakes alongside KazMunayGaz. China's CNPC and Japan's Inpex hold smaller shares. We are acting for Kazakhstan in that case, while Three Crowns represents the NCOC consortium. Kazakhstan filed the claim under the Kashagan PSA in April 2023, saying NCOC has abused the contract's expense calculation procedures, which also grant the consortium a 98% share of post-royalty revenues. The state also alleges the project has been afflicted by development delays, environmental damage and corruption, based on subcontractors obtaining inflated contracts. Kazakhstan is also pursuing its corruption allegations in the Swiss and US courts through "PSA LLC," an entity that represents Kazakhstan's interests under production sharing agreements.
