About Anna

Anna Fraser is an associate in the Intellectual Property & Technology Practice, based in the firm's Washington DC office. Her practice focuses on Intellectual Property (IP) litigation, including representing clients in Section 337 investigations at the International Trade Commission (ITC).

During law school, Anna served as an editor for the North Carolina Law Review and provided pro bono counsel to clients through the university's Economic Justice clinic.

Anna was a judicial extern for Judge Jeffrey Carpenter in the North Carolina Court of Appeals, where she prepared bench briefs for both civil and criminal cases.

Prior to law school, Anna worked for several years as a paralegal at a Washington DC firm. In that role, she provided litigation support for cases before DC courts and agencies, including the Office of Administrative Hearings and the DC Court of Appeals.
