About Bradley

Bradley Harris is a director in the banking and finance team, based in the London office. He has extensive experience in asset-based lending (ABL) and asset finance, and his work spans a wide range of banking and finance matters.

Bradley advises on bilateral and syndicated transactions and works with banks, financial institutions and corporate borrowers. His practice focuses on ABL and asset finance, including complex nonrecourse receivables finance transactions, and domestic and international ABL and asset finance matters.

Bradley has worked at two leading ABL law firms and spent eight years as head of UK legal for ABL and asset finance at a European bank. He joined the firm in January 2026, bringing with him significant experience in both private practice and in-house roles.

Experience

- Lead in-house counsel for a large international financial institution's most significant and complex asset-based lending and nonrecourse receivables purchase transactions, including a US$300 million syndicated nonrecourse receivables finance transaction, a syndicated £100 million receivables and inventory transaction, and a participation in a £200 million off-balance sheet receivable purchase programme for an IT hardware supplier.
- Advising a financial institution on its project to overhaul and update its template documentation for ABL and asset finance.
- Advising a European bank on its project to obtain capital requirement regulation (CRR) sign off for ABL and asset finance matters
- Advising a syndicate of European banks on a multijurisdiction €80 million receivables finance facility for a large manufacturing group.
- Advising as lead European counsel to a US bank-led syndicate in connection with a US$475 million receivables facility for a significant car parts manufacturer.

- Advising as lead fee earner to a European bank syndicate on a €100 million borrowing base facility for a large energy company covering receivables, inventory and letter of credit facilities.
