About Camille

Camille Cretin is an associate within the International Dispute Resolution Practice Group based in the Paris office. He advises and represents clients in commercial and industrial risk litigation, as well as in international commercial and investment arbitration. His practice also focuses on issues of environmental law.

Camille assists companies from varying sectors and industries, as well as states and state-entities in resolving their disputes, whether amicably or through representation in courts or international arbitration.

His practice encompasses a wide range of disputes, including commercial and contract disputes, as well as industrial risk litigation matters involving product liability, environmental liability, insurance and international private law issues. Camille also frequently advises and represents clients on environmental law issues, such as waste and packaging regulations, environmental permits (ICPE) or environmental loss (préjudice écologique).

Prior to joining the firm, Camille worked in the litigation and energy and natural resources disputes departments of a global law firm, as well as in the French subsidiary of a major Czech energy company.

Camille is fluent in French, English and Spanish and regularly works in all three languages.

Experience
