About Caroline

Caroline Carrier is an associate in our Labor & Employment Practice Group. She works with clients across the public and private sectors, ranging from international corporations to individuals, on how to best navigate the legal issues facing their employment relationships and corporate efficiency. Her practice focuses on litigation and assisting clients through all stages of employment-related, contract-related and business-related disputes, including pre- and post-dispute compliance advising to mitigate future risk.

Caroline earned her J.D. from the University of Notre Dame. During law school, she served as the editor-in-chief of Notre Dame's Journal on Emerging Technologies, where she oversaw legal scholarship on modern topics like data privacy and artificial intelligence (AI). She additionally competed as an American Bar Association moot court oralist and participated in the Special Education Law Clinic, counseling local residents on education-related legal questions.
