About Henry

Henry Goldschmidt is a director in the London Litigation Practice, working within the Sports & Entertainment Industry Group and focusing on contentious and regulatory sports matters.

Henry has successfully represented stakeholders from across the sports industry, including international federations, national governing bodies, leagues, clubs, teams, competition organisers, agencies, investors, senior executives, coaches and athletes. In addition to the English courts, he has acted before various national and international tribunals and the Court of Arbitration for Sport – many of them high-profile cases.

He has advised on a broad spectrum of issues, including financial fair play, multi-club ownership, owners' and directors' duties, anti-doping, concussion, agency, governance, eligibility, safeguarding, selection appeals, negligence, contractual claims, the sale and purchase of clubs/teams and international transfers. Henry has also conducted a number of investigations (of varying scopes and sizes) in relation to matters of sporting integrity, executive misconduct, athlete welfare and discrimination.

Henry is a trained commercial litigator and, alongside his sports practice, has represented clients across an array of other sectors. His recent work includes successfully defending a US$100 million oil and gas claim in the English High Court, guiding a multinational brewing company through an expert determination process, advising a digital services provider on cross-border warranty and indemnity claims, and representing a public figure in relation to reputational issues and online harassment.

Henry has completed the BASL Post Graduate Certificate in Sports Law from De Montfort University (with distinction), and has also spent time in-house on secondment.
