About Meghan

Meghan Hill co-chairs our global Labor & Employment Practice Group.

Her clients benefit from her holistic approach and ability to incorporate their goals and objectives when working to prevent and solve employment law problems. Meghan's big-picture view allows her to understand all ramifications employers face when dealing with issues, as well as identify broader issues outside of employment. Meghan works with numerous diversified industrial companies and healthcare companies.

Meghan regularly represents companies in complex litigation and wage and hour collective and Rule 23 class actions in federal courts, including multidistrict litigation (MDL). She has extensive experience working with international companies on litigation and has handled covenant not to compete cases for clients in numerous industries and regularly defends employers against intentional tort, whistleblower, discrimination and wrongful termination claims. In addition to her litigation work, Meghan advises employers on compliance with state and federal employment and labor laws and emphasizes the importance of training as a way for companies to maintain compliance with ever-changing employment regulations. This aspect of her practice includes coaching on compliance with wage and hour regulations and payroll auditing, specifically in the healthcare and manufacturing industries. Her familiarity with hospital payroll systems allows her to provide comprehensive compliance counseling to clients in the healthcare sector. Meghan also investigates complaints of workplace discrimination, harassment and illegality, including whistleblower claims under various federal laws.

Meghan works with the firm's corporate practitioners to guide clients with labor and employment matters arising in mergers, acquisitions, restructurings and other business transactions and counsels on appropriate employment structures to help clients avoid future liabilities. She also drafts employment and expatriate contracts and restrictive covenants for executives in a variety of industries.

In addition to her traditional employment practice, Meghan has significant experience with matters involving workplace safety, including OSHA, investigations, audits and wrongful death defense.

Meghan is recognized in The Best Lawyers in America and has an active role in the firm's Women's Enterprise group, as well as women's mentoring initiatives throughout Central Ohio. She is the co-author of Wages and Hours – An Employer's Guide, published by the American Chamber of Commerce since 2011.

Prior to joining Squire Patton Boggs, Meghan served as a law clerk for the Honorable James A. Wynn Jr. of the North Carolina Court of Appeals (now, Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals) and a legal intern for Senator Michael DeWine.

- Successful jury trial resulting in a finding of no liability for a construction client on negligence and breach of contract claims.
- Defending successfully an appeal of a grant of a summary judgment on behalf of a diversified industrials employer in a wrongful death claim.
- Obtaining summary judgment and successfully defending appeal on sexual discrimination, age discrimination, wrongful termination and breach of contract cases for multiple clients in the healthcare and diversified industrials industries.
- Defending successfully administrative charges for age, race, gender, disability and pregnancy discrimination and retaliation claims for a variety of companies.
- Conducting numerous whistleblower and harassment investigations for a variety of companies.

- Defending a home healthcare facility company in Ohio in a class action suit relating to an FLSA companionship exemption that excludes workers from providing companionship services to the elderly or disabled from federal minimum wage and overtime protections. The class of employees was limited to a mere 40 persons out of a putative class of more than 800 by the development of an aggressive pretrial litigation strategy that questioned the sufficiency of the plaintiffs' allegations and agreeing to a stipulated smaller class. The limited class permitted the company to settle quickly with little discovery.
